

Greenwich Maritime Institute

Transcript

Voice-over

Steeped in naval and maritime history, Greenwich is the perfect place to study the oceans and seas past, present and future.

Our taught postgraduate programmes cover maritime history, business and international policy. Short courses offer a taste of several subjects from pollution to piracy. You will find a rich mixture of ages, nationalities and career backgrounds at Greenwich Maritime Institute creating a lively and vibrant atmosphere.

Professor Chris Bellamy

Director of Greenwich Maritime Institute

"If you want to study maritime matters then Greenwich is the obvious place to do it."

Chris Ware

Lecturer in Naval History

"You've got instant links with big business or if you want to do history most of the archives are within twenty five miles of this very campus."

Professor Chris Bellamy

Director of Greenwich Maritime Institute

"Across the way there is the National Maritime Museum which has superb facilities. There is the Royal Observatory and of course, the Greenwich Meridian, from which navigation around the world is calculated and we are right here by the river Thames. Fantastic river communications into central London."

Chris Ware

Lecturer in Naval History

"It's a very varied mix. You have international students virtually from any nation that has anything to do with maritime history and modern times."

Kentaro Furuya

Maritime Policy Student

"We study maritime policy in different countries. It is something very complex."

Georgia Balta

Maritime History Student

"They combine everything that has to do with maritime history and modern times."

Professor Chris Bellamy

Director of Greenwich Maritime Institute

"Students vary from young postgraduate students who may have just completed a first degree right through to senior sea faring professionals who have spent a lot of time at sea."

William Sadler

Maritime Management Student & Deck Officer

"It's quite interesting for me because I've come from a professional background where all my teachings are professional qualifications. Academic life is quite different but what is very nice is that it is very small groups, it's been very friendly and there is lots of advice. They are obviously very well connected to people who come and talk to us; they have a lot of experience within the industry."

Professor Chris Bellamy

Director of Greenwich Maritime Institute

"The Greenwich Maritime Institute specialises in postgraduate programmes."

Chris Ware

Lecturer in Naval History

"Degrees are MA history, MA policy and an MBA in maritime management. PHDs run from history of victualling boards, to policy, anti piracy and virtually any subject in-between."

Professor Chris Bellamy

Director of Greenwich Maritime Institute

"It is a traditional university mix of teaching, research and dissemination through publication and our publishing record, I think, is second to none."

William Sadler

Maritime Management Student & Deck Officer

"There is an excellent library here with a big maritime section. The on-line facilities are very good, Web CT particularly means you can do a lot of work from home."

Georgia Balta

Maritime History Student

"We've got our own excellent teachers and they are always able to answer either via telephone, e-mail or in person."

William Sadler

Maritime Management Student & Deck Officer

"London is one of the major centres for maritime industry in the world and Greenwich is at the heart of that. It feels very maritime when you are here and that's very evident when you're working within Greenwich Maritime Institute."

Professor Chris Bellamy

Director of Greenwich Maritime Institute

"If you're interested in matters maritime then I would suggest that there is nowhere else that you would want to come."

Voice-over

Become part of our Maritime heritage.

University of Greenwich: visit www.gre.ac.uk

