Economics is much more than number crunching; it is the foundation for many aspects of all our lives, from personal income to international trade. Study economics and you will gain valuable skills, analytical thinking, problem solving, communication, all highly prized by employers.

You could end up as a professional economist, stockbroker or banker. Your programme will give you the knowledge and practical skills to meet the demand of both national and international employers.

Jon Sibson

Dean of the Business School

“Here at Greenwich, we have got this most marvellous location. The Business School is based in the lovely Old Royal Naval College, designed by Wren, and standing outside my office, I can look north across the river and I’ve got the whole of Canary Wharf and every day when I arrive at work, that vision gives me a lift, I think everyone who studies here and works here feels the same.”

Dr Tesfa Mahari

Programme Leader, Economics

“Economics in Greenwich gives straight economics with all the core subjects in micro macro and the other options which follow also provide the banking pathway and also provide the business economic subject area.”

Nomundari Bold

Economic BSc Hons Student

“The best part about studying economics at Greenwich is how the programme is taught here. The professors are very helpful, they basically guide you through every single detail and they remind you what you have to do and it’s just the way they teach is very, they are very passionate about teaching, to me it seems like it and I just love how the lecturers are taught here.”

Dr Tesfa Mahari

Programme Leader, Economics

“We have got strong links with the Royal Economic Society which provides us with the latest developments in the field. We have got links to the public sector, especially the Government Economic Service; we take our students at least twice a year to the treasury to see seminars.”

Gabriella Cagliesi

Programme Leader, BSc Economics

“The reason why we have made our programmes more internationalised is to respond more to the needs of a more global society, culture and economic environment.”

Nomundari Bold

Economic BSc Hons Student

“I just love the campus. I love the people because it is very diverse, you will see people from different ethnic backgrounds, everywhere at the campus.”

Jon Sibson

Dean of the Business School

“At the Business School, we try and use a variety of very engaging and interesting teaching methods so don’t think just lecture after lecture after lecture, there is business simulations, there are case studies and of course we get in outside experts, people from industry from the financial services industry to give their experience and to really bring things to life.”

Dr Tesfa Mahari

Programme Leader, Economics

“We take them to the Bank of England; they will understand the city of London as well as how the regulations work. In addition to this, within Greenwich, we also have employers forum where we have got the top leaders of all financial, as well as public as well as private institutions and they come and they inform our curriculum, they give placements to our students and with that, therefore, we always, more or less, most of our students know which area of employment they would take by the beginning of the final year.”

Jon Sibson

Dean of the Business School

“At the Business School, we see it as a really important part of our job to help equip students to find a good career, not just a job, but a good career.”

Nomundari Bold

Economic BSc Hons Student

“The campus is also very beautiful, we have the Thames river right next to us. The buildings are very beautiful and I’m really glad to be here.”
